

putting on the same medicine and they always had some kind of complaint, somewhere. But, I think, really it's all up in here. I always tell some people here, it's all up here.

"I think you might have a chance to bring that up tonight."

"This morning the subject came up, someone brought it up, I think it was on the health educators, that sometimes people go to the hospital just to visit or to meet friends. I don't know if not too many people that work at this hospital respond to that so, I didn't get an idea how they respond to that." Well, there are people that are in the hospital from town, they come out and visit with them but that's not all the time. It's just the immediate family that goes out. But, well, I think they feel like that the less visiting a patient has the more rest he's going to get.

"Oh, yes."

I mean, I think, that's the way they look at it. I don't know. But I know I have friends who go out to the hospital, but I never go out there and visit with them, maybe once when they first go in, you know. I feel like that they need more rest for whatever is wrong with them. Than to have bunch of them in the room with them.

"Listen, would you like to come down and eat with us?"

No, I've got to get on my pass and get ready and go out there.

"Well, listen, I sure appreciate your coming by."

(End of Side A)

Well, that was in '55, I think, when Public Health took over all the Indian hospitals. I was down there on Labor Day and he was one of the surgeons.

We had her and he got up and he said, well, since the few months I have been here, I have taken out more gall stones than anything else.

Laughter. . . . .

What he said is true, I mean Indian people like to eat and they're not going to starve either. They're going to get the food someway.
