

have no kids. But this youngest one, she was the one that bringing the children. And when the law come to make him take his choice, he took the one that didn't have no kids! He left that poor woman with all them kids! His name was Lime.

(What did she do?)

Oh, she went away and she got married. Well, she was just like that--you know, just went run around awhile and she'd marry one man and they'd leave her and she'd marry another one and he'd leave her. I think she was married five times after she quit her husband. I know the first husband she had was Jay Gould, and then Powder Face and then Rudolph Left Hand and Dan Black Horse. And then this Leslie Throws First, he got her and he's the one that kept her until he died.

(Imogene: Who's that?)

Hannie (name unintelligible).

(Imogene: She was married to Frank Wood when she died.)

Oh, sure! She's been married six times. And Leslie Throws First and Rudolph Left Hand--she had a little boy from Rudolph and she had a little girl from Leslie. And then she married Frank Wood--yeah, she's (married) six or seven-- (You know your husband's father--the one that had the four wives? Do you know what happened to him? Did he have to give up three of them?)

No. They already were gone. The youngest one died first and then another one--the oldest one--I think she died. And then the other wife, she died, and his (Myrtle's husband's mother) mother was the only one that was left, with her husband. Well, she died afterward.

(It must have been hard on a lot of people, though to have to--)

Yeah. And see, when all these three died, well, my husband's mother had to take care of these other women's kids. But they didn't have very many kids.

Henry Lincoln's mother just had him and his sister. And then that Dick Birdshead,
