

down at Fort Smith. Well, Henry and Kid Wilson, they made a big haul and had lots of money and went to Colorado Springs; and, boy, they was throwing a whing dinger up there, you know. They didn't give a damn for money. Well, there was a woman tipped them off. She'd been getting money from them, I guess, maybe living with Henry or something like that. She got mad at him, and she went and told them laws, by god, right where Henry and Kid Wilson was. So, they walked in on him and the Kid, and they arrested both of them. Well, they took them to Fort Smith too, and Henry killed that Joe Wilson, that United States marshal, Damn, they wanted him for murder. They had him hooked up short. Well, they took them to Fort Smith. Put them in jail there. That's when Cherokee Bill was running wild.
(Yeah.)

MORE ABOUT OUTLAWS - CRITTENDEN BOYS

Well, his name wasn't Cherokee Bill. Lula Cook gave him that damn Cherokee Bill name. His name was Crawford Golsby. He was raised down there around Fort Gibson.

(What was his name?)

His name was Crawford Golsby. That was his name, and they called him Cherokee Bill. But here's the way he got that name. Lula Cook, Lula's brother was orphans because their mother was dead. But they had a place up north of Tahlequah there, and they had an aunt, Evelyn Crittenden. There's two of them Crittendens, Zeke Crittenden and Nick Crittenden. Then, Ed Reed, United States marshal killed both of them right up here in Wagoner right on street.

(Well.)

They go in there. There's a gambling house up on the north end of town. They'd get drunk up there and lose what little money they had. They'd go
