

orders to give you orders to draw their money. You bring it over to me." Said, "That will clear up. That will show that we were justified in paying the money over to you. If they give you orders to draw it, see, that's all we want. We just want to be in the clear ourself. That will clear it if you do that." Well, Lou went back home. So, the next day, Jim and Bill come in. They was over there on fourteen mile creek. They had this Cherokee deal they was spelling these names. They call the roll by then. (sentence not clear) They had been in lot of them places together, and they come there and they told Lou. Said, "Lou, by god, we need our money. I don't know how we're going to get it." She told them what she'd done. Said, "Jim, you boys give me orders for this money. They told me that. I told them about it. They told me if you got Jim and Bill to give you orders to draw this money, that will show that you had the legal right to get it, and they'll pay it to us. I'll go over there and enter it and get your money." Well, by god, they did. They both drew out orders for their money. Well, they went over there, and there was lots of people guarding that First National Bank. They had money, paying them the money, see? And that bank was slam-jam full of damn money, government money. And there was about twenty of them Indians they got guarding it, you see, guarding the payment checks. Well, but there's still--now, he had a posse now (static--words not clear) these fellas that was doing the guarding. They didn't have nothing to do with it. They was just guarding that money, see?

(Yeah.)
