Oh yeah--there's thirteen tweins around the Arapahoes.

(Well, if you had a twin brother and you were talking to him, how would you call him?)

I would individually address him by his name, knowing our relationship. And there are lot of twins where there's one boy and one girl. Up to the present time that I've studied.

(Bittle: How would you call him if you were talking to somebody else about him?)

Well, I'd refer to his name, but not as a twin--just as a brother. No exceptional--nothing exceptional about it. Because they'd know that he's my brother--my twin brother, younger than I am, or older.

(And what would that word for brother be?)

Well, if he's older than I am, I'd call him   nae.saehae -- nae.saehaeae Not referring to his being a twin. Just like I'd be referring to brother Henry or Ira. Or if he was younger I'd tell him· te'yω· -- te'yω.nω If I was addressing to the two twin brothers, or if one of them was a sister or a girl, I'd address them as   te'yω.nω · That's twins.

(And what would you use that term for?)

Younger brother and sister. . That applies to sister, too. Just so they're younger than I am--whether they're twins or not,

*   *   *   *

--no relationships. Not even his name. Unless he'd be out in the yead, say, I'd call him by his name, to come in. That's the only time I'd address him.

(Well, you know this term, te'yω , when would you use that?)

Whenever you're addressing him. And even if I'm referring to him to a second party, same term-- te'yω -- That means "child brother" or "child-sister." teyω means "child."