

hinin^ω Whether they're sisters or cousins or unrelated plural wives of a man, when they're referring to the rest of his wives they say hinin^ω (Now, going back to this term, naeni.si^ωn^ω, could a husband use this when he's talking to his wife?):

Yes. Yeah.

(What if a husband has maybe two or three wives--and he's talking to all of them at the same time--could he still use that?)

No. No. That's just where there's just two wives. Refers to his two wives. When there's more than two wives, he addresses her by her name. It's a known fact that she's his wife and he's referring to her or addressing her directly as his wife. Not by name.

(But if he just has two wives, can he use naeni.si^ωn^ω?)

Yeah, he can use that. Because naeni-- ni.s means "two." Just like in German--I guess you know German--
