

Yeah, I had a brother. His name was Samuel Bad Man.

(Did you have any other full brothers or full sisters?)

No. I had a half-sister.

(Did you have the same mother?)

Same mother but different fathers. She was older than I was.

(What was her father's name?)

Nash. He was a white man. They used to have soldiers up here, I guess.

(What was your sister's name?)

Amy Nash.

(And she was older than you?)

She was older than I.

(Did you have any other sisters or brothers?)

I didn't have no other sisters.

(Did your mother stay with this Nash very long?)

I don't know. Because she was way older than I was. And I never did know her father. I never did know how she come, but she was part white. My uncle used to say he was an Irishman. I don't know whether she lived with him or not.

You know, she might have done like the rest of--just had her.

(Do you remember your father?)

Yeah. He used to be a policeman up here. Indian police, over here at Cantonment.

(Did you live with your mother and father? When you were real little?)

Yeah. I lived with them.

(Where did you all live?)

Right here at Cantonment. Right southeast of that building that's there yet.

(What about your father's parents--what was his mother's name?)

I don't know. I never did know her very much.

(What about his father?)
