

(Where do they live? Carol and her husband?)

In San Francisco!

(Do they get back to Oklahoma very much?)

They were back here last summer. You was at the pow-wow (Barefoot) last year-- there was a tall slim white girl with purple blanket. She used to sit with me. That's her daughter.

(Will they come back for this year's pow-wow?)

That's what they plan. She said the kids wants to come back.

(What does her husband do?)

he works--he's a mechanic, I guess. He works somewhere where they fix these ships and everything.

(That's all of your grandchildren, I guess, and your great-grandchildren. I have a few more questions about your family history. When you were young and still living with your mother, were you living close to your grandmother, Punkin?)

Yes. Yes. Just right next to them.

(Were there other people in the same--camp?)

Oh, yeah. There used to be some people camped. That one I'm always talking about, my aunt, Medicine (Woman), she used to camp by us.

(Now how is Medicine Woman related to you?)

Well, she's--see, my grandmother was married to this Road Traveller. That's supposed to be Medicine Woman's own uncle. You know, her uncle. Her mother's brother, I guess. And she used to stay around us. It was her uncle there.

(Road Traveller was Medicine Woman's uncle.)

Yeah. (pause) Jesse Rowledge ourht to know everything.

(He should?)

He should. He's older.

(He's older than you, isn't he?)
