

addressing a second party about your sons. ^{1/1} neih' whw' Head son or adopted son or your brother's son, or your cousin's sons.
All them terms applies same way.

(Bittle: To your brothers' sons, too?)

Oh, yeah. And your cousins' sons. And your adopted brothers' sons. All those terms apply the same way.

(Would it make any difference if it was your older brother's son or your younger brother's son?)

No, it don't make no difference. It all applies the same way.
Including your step-brothers' sons.

(Would you say that term for me once more--that one where you have more than one son and you're referring to all of them?)

^{1/1} neih' whw'

(What about your daughter. If you're addressing your daughter, what would you use?)

No specific term on that--just call them by name.

(What if you're talking about your daughter to someone else?)

Wait, I take that back. n'w t'w . -- when you got one girl daughter.

(Again?)

n'w t'w . -- N-A-T-A. And when you have more than one girl daughter you say n'w t'w . n'w h w' When you're addressing them or referring to them.

(Bittle: Would you say that again?)

n'w t'w . n'w h w' That includes your adopted daughter or your step-daughter or your brother's daughter or your sister-in-law's daughter.

(Bittle: What if you're talking to somebody else about your daughter, what do you call her?)
