

No sir, I do not.

(Used to be in the east towards the river from where it is now.)

Yeah, but I don't know where that place is.

(Now, on Brushy's cemetery how, how old a place is that? It must have been started a long time ago.)

Long time ago. Yes, a very long time ago. Way back--(not clear) They made salt down there.

(Yeah)

And that church originated in there--down there.

(Well)

(Not clear) went out of style you know. Used that church to meet up there in the summer. That's an old wooden church there.

(Yeah)

(Not clear) that cornerstone in that church--

(Well)

But it got turned around. I was telling somebody the other day they shouldn't have turned that around.

(Well, you've seen this whole country change, haven't you?)

Yes sir I sure have. Then I see--oh lots people come and go. And Honeycut.

And he is buried in that cemetery. But its grown up in thick underbrush.

(Well)

And this man came right up through there. Found graves in there, headstones.

(Yeah. Were there many old timers that were over there buried at Brushy?

Let's see, were the Vanns and Chouteaus?)

Chouteaus?

(Were there--Yeah)

Oh yeah, they got their marker there.

(Yeah. And Riders.)
