

(Well. Everybody peaceful.)

Yeah.

(What was that fiddle dance like?)

What?

(What did they do at the fiddle dance?)

They usually had a supper.

(Yeah)

Midnight, a supper, they call it midnight dinner I call it, what I call it now. And everybody donate a little money you know for the next Saturday night they have something to eat, you know.

(Well.)

And the women and girls they cook pies and stuff like that, you know.

(That sounds good.)

Yeah. They kill chickens.

LOCUST GROVE - ROSS MARKHAM

(Long time ago down here close to Locust Grove where that park is now, big spring there.)

Yeah.

(Whose place was that one?)

I really don't know. There's Markham or (name not clear) one or the other.

(Yeah)

One of them two. Its was some half-breed anyway.

(Yeah. Well did they call it Markham spring or did they have a name for it?)

Yeah, right north west there right along where the dam is, right there, Markham Bend they call it nowadays.

(Yeah.)

(tape skip)

Markham started a town up there at Locust.
