

And they all live right close to store down here at Rose and over here at Bryce Holler here.

(Well)

Old man Bryce, you know.

(On the river.)

Due north out there. And Salina I believe closest one--there's one lives at Crawley.

(Well.)

GRIST MILLS - THRASHING MACHINES

And Tahlequah, and Southwest City they'd go up there, too.

(Yeah. Southwest City.)

Yeah. I think they had a grist mill up there somewhere.

(Well. Is that where they went to get their corn ground?)

Yeah.

(That's a long ways over there.)

Yeah. We leave early of a morning and come in the next morning. Sometime the next day.

(Two days.)

Yeah.

(tape skip)

Wash Swimmer, out here. Wash Swimmer had a thrashing machine it'd thrash that out. They grow wheat you know. They--

(Yeah)

They thrashed it and haul it to Southwest City and bring flour back then later on, you know. It would take 'm about a day--day and a half, I guess, to make it down there and back.

(Well. Well did Saugee Sanders have a store at one time?)

No, Andy Dick had one.
