

I know they use to dry pumpkin.

Unidentified Voice: They said they used to dry beans too.

(Dried beans.)

Unidentified Voice: Green beans, you know, like we do now.

(Well.)

Unidentified Voice: They said they would just string 'em on a string and just hang 'em on there by their fire, right back of the cook stove just on the wall.

(Well, just hang 'em on the wall and dry 'em.)

Unidentified Voice: Yeah, that's what my grandma used to tell me.

(Yeah. Well, they done things different long time ago than they do now. In fact, they don't do much now, do they?)

No. I remember one time there was some kind of gathering to-do at Tahlequah at the Capitol Square, you know.

(Yes ma'am.)

And there was some Pawnees come there to dance.

(Well.)

Yeah, there was a white man come there, said "Oh I wouldn't marry an Indian for nothing." And I said, "You get out of this bunch of people then." (laughs) (He's in the wrong place isn't he?)

"You get out of here if you don't like the Indians." And I told him, "I got you told." And he did get away too.

(Well.)

Unidentified Voice: Grandpa has got a long... Them boys he said only time when they would get a biscuit just of a morning, you know, said they'd have a biscuit, every morning.

Mr. Gourd: Well that's what my grandmother used to do. We'd have biscuits for breakfast and corn bread for dinner.
