

"Just come as you are." I said, "No, I'm already (word not clear)." So he drove out. He got up there where that tree is. (Sentence not clear.) He said a woman, it's on a side of the hill, he said a woman got in up there. I could just see the woman open the door and get in. He said he was going slow enough and that woman had a black thin shawl over her head. Was holding like this. She got in the back seat. It's up over the hill. I looked this way and I could see her sitting there. And he said, "I don't know where you're going. But I'm going to town." He said, "If you're going with me why you sit there and I'll take you to town." So he said he started to get scared. You know kind of cold chills. Said, "No, I mustn't do that." "I'll just ask her if she's going to town." So he asked her. (Word not clear) He got to the windmill kind of slowed down. He said she got off. Felt that, you know how doors open, you feel that wind coming in. Said, "I felt the wind hit me and I looked and she got off and went south." "Went south." And said he never thought anything else about it and Ernie Keahbone. You know Ernie Keahbone he used to live at Wallace. He used to live at Wishita. He came over one time. He said, "I come over here to tell you all a story." He told us that same story. He said, "I was coming by and it was real late." "And a woman got in my car over here." And he said, "You know me, I'm just a devil. And I really got scared and I don't know how I drove. And I went south I guess." No, he was in a pick-up. He got in the cab with him. He said, "He went south and he went on the highway. And by the time he said," "I was just ready to faint." Over there by Lee Clark's. And he turned where Lee Clark used to live. He turned in and he said, "I was so scared." And he said, "I honked the horn." And Lee Clark came out, it was way in the night. Lee Clark came out and he said, "What's the matter?" "He opened the door and I guess I fell out." And Lee Clark said, "Where's that woman you had in here?"
