

(Is that right?)

They moved that church house. They quit having--they used to have services down there, you know. I remember I went down there one time. We went down there. That was back during the depression. Before it. And I went down there. Went down to the church. (Words not clear) go down to church when I--once in a while down there.

(Yeah.)

This old preacher. Old boy come down there. Boy, he was dead drunk.

(Laughter) I saw he was drunk. We tried to keep him out of the church house. But he kept talking about church. He got out and jumped somebody come in and told about it. Got him going for a ride. We got him up in the mountains. Right up through the mountains. He said (not clear) I went out (not clear). We got in and took him down. All the way down to the little church house down there. (not clear) down there. His name was Thompson.

(Thompson Field.)

He married one of my cousins. He died long time ago and then she died, oh, it was during World War II or something like that. Before it. And he told me now when the Civil War broke out, one of his aunts, said, "One of my aunts tried to get me to go back east with her." And he said, "I wouldn't go, didn't want to go." She went back east. She must have been (words not clear).

(Yeah.)

I don't know whether -- whether he just claimed her as his aunt -- (static).

(Yeah.)

HARD TIMES AFTER CIVIL WAR

But anyway she went. After the Civil War was over with and, he said, boy
