

(What did they make their bow and arrows out of? What kind of wood in those early days?)

Well; they made 'the bow out of Boisdarc or Black Locust. Either one. And arrows,, they made 'em out of Locust.

Third man's voice: They sure made some good ones too. I'll tell you. Use sinew out of deer.

Yeah.

Third man's voice: Put their feathers on the arrows. Call it "Wa-toon".

(What kind of feathers did they use on their arrows.)

Third man's voice: Well, different kinds. Hawk feathers or Eagle feathers.

Lot of 'em like the old red tailed Hawk feather.

(Well.)

WHATEVER HAPPENED TO THE EEL?

(Words not clear) -- fish.

(Yeah, you know, the eel we used to get in the river.)

I don't know.

(He's gone.)

Yeah. I couldn't tell you. Boy, I sure used to like to eat them. Eat on 'em.

(Oh, me too.)

They're really good! They're not boney.

(No. I haven't see one in many years.)

That's the way with me. I haven't seen any lately. I just wouldn't know what become of 'em.

(And that old white, soft shell turtle. I don't see him anymore.)

No.

(Something has happened. And I suspicion that's on account of these dams they 'been putting in.)
