

They had to.

(But people had plenty though, didn't they? I mean, no one ever went hungry.)

Well, that's right.

(May not have had any money, but they were all healthy.)

Yeah, that cradle they used that cutting grain. I don't know whether a fellar ever see one now or not.

(I've never seen one.)

Third man's voice: I haven't seen one in years and years.

Well, I guess they just quit making 'em.

Third man's voice: I think they have. I guess they have.

(Well, I guess they raised all kinds of grain back in them days, didn't they?)

Well, yeah. They raise corn and such as that. And beans, potatoes, such as that.

(Yeah. Wheat and oats.)

That's right.

(Did they have headed feed back in those days?)

What?

(Headed feed. What we call kafir and maize.)

Well, it showed up afterwards.

(I see.)

Yeah, they finally got to putting that out. But it was mostly just corn, you know, wheat such as that. Yeah, using that cradle. It took a man to use it.

Third man's voice: Yes, sir. It sure was.

They use a cradle that day, he sure would feel like resting at night.
