

Go on over to Hart. Reed. Reed was that name.

(Reed.)

That's boy's anme was Reed. And that was supposed to have been Pearl's husband.

(Yeah.)

But I don't think she went by the name of Reed.

(Well, that must have been pretty wild country over there in those early days then.)

Huh?

(I said that must have been wild country in those early days where they could hide out like that.)

Jack Brown's daddy was United States Marshall when (name not clear) was a town. Jack Brown lived there, see. He came up with him. Old man John Brown. (rest of sentence not clear) Oh man! There was a big write-up in the paper the other day. Sallisaw paper about Webber Falls have a 150 year being there. They talked about an old Bois D'Arc tree down there. I know where the tree is. About it being the hanging-tree and all that stuff. There ain't nothing to that. There wasn't hanging. They was whipping folks right there by it.

(Yeah.)

There never was a hanging tree there.

WEBBER FALLS - PORUM - CHECOTAH.

(This was the Canadian district of the old Cherokee Nation. I never was sure.

Well, did that district have its own courthouse?)

Huh?

(Did the Canadian district have a district courthouse in Indian Territory days?)

I don't think so. Canadian, Cooweescoowee all those had the same--about the same government.

(Yeah.)

You know we used to say I was working over at Canadian district over there
