

They put us out of the building completely, till that was over. Anyway, this boy didn't take his punishment and the professors went out looking for him after the others had been paddled and met him coming upstairs. The steps on the east side of the building there; must have been about 14 or 15 steps weren't there? Uh-huh. Yeah, and he knocked the professor off the steps, and another one of the professors had been a football player, there himself--W.T. Scott, you remember him? Yeah. And he was athletic himself. The two of 'em, they drug this boy in the superintendent's office right by the door inside that entrance and paddled him and then sent him home. (much laughter by all) He didn't get rid of the paddling. He took the paddling all right. Then they sent him home. Rest of 'em they didn't--that was their punishment.

(They just sent 'em home and didn't let 'em come back if they didn't behave themselves?)

That's right. And we were talking just before, the best discipline was among the upper--classmen. They wouldn't stand for anything destructive nor anything subversive. They were all loyal to the school and they were--Oh, I don't know, they were--

CLOSE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN STUDENTS:

(Mr. Tyner, you said that this afternoon--he said they had a great feeling for one another; a close relationship?)

That's right. They had an unwritten code where no one would tell anything on another one. If you found out about it, why you found out some other way.

(Most of them appreciate the opportunity of being there?)

Yea, but I tell you one thing, I'd like to see that faculty get hold of these communists that they got up before the United States Senate. (much laughter)

FIRST DAY:

(What about this--you were telling me one time about a band or an orchestra that you called was Scroggins?)

Yeah, Scroggins orchestra. We had one there and the members of that orchestra lived in one room. We were under quarantine, when the year was out. We were
