

there. May times I have heard read every morning of the world we had chapel. How many times I have heard "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." I have heard that over and over. And "A wise son maketh a happy father." and that kind of thing, we heard that every morning.

(The teachers were not necessarily religious teachers were they?)

Not necessarily.

(They were brought there because of the education?)

That's right. And they were loyal and they were patriotic.

Tyner: I think he had the best training that anybody can give a bunch of boys.

All our teachers were A number 1, I thought, in every way.

(Mr. Butler, you have anything to add?)

No, they told everything pretty well, I think. I have gone to a number of schools and different teachers but I have never found one that I thought was more interested in the curriculum or the whole school in general than the teachers that we had here at the old male seminary at that time; and the department and teaching of the students too.

(If you had a son ready to go to school and they had that type of school now, would you recommend or encourage him to go to a school like that?)

I surely would.

(Would you Mr. Tyner?)

I would.

(You Mr. Duncan?)

If I had a school like that I'd be looking for it. If I had a son.

Tyner: I don't know whether she was R.N. or not--what did you call her?--Aunt Dolly--Aunt Dolly Galloway. She looked after us boys. When any of 'em took sick, why she certainly did wait on 'em. Give 'em medicine. I don't know whether she--I guess she certainly did wait on 'em. Give 'em medicine. I don't know whether she--I guess she maybe she was a R.M. I don't know. Yeah--Johnny Whitley went to school there and his school days until his junior year when he had to quit and go home and take care of his mother and father. But he finished his
