We had a uniform. Cause, I think I told you once before that some of 'em didn't have suits or coats and some of 'em did. When we went anywhere, we all looked alike. We all looked alike. We all had uniforms. You couldn't tell whether we had a coat or not. We all looked the same. Same class uniform, same price and everything. If they had a $50 suit there, they wore this uniform when they went anywhhte.

(Everybody on same level?)

Same level. You could not tell who was who. And they were of good material though.

(What was the price?)

We bought those on our own. That was a must. We had to have 'em.

MORE PERSONAL EXPERIENCES:

(Mr. Butler, you remember anything in particular about what happened to you there?)

Butler: No, don't believe I don. Nothing particular. Nothing like that. I was just everyday student. And everything run smooth only when I got into a little trouble on my own account which was quite often.

(Got some paddlings while you were there?)

Oh, yeah. I had quite a number of demerits paddled off so I could go to town once in a while (laughter by all) same as everybody else. One time there was a boy lived around Grove, named Roger Stover. He could think up more mean things to get into than anybody I ever saw. But he was my buddy and I was always willing to help him. So I think everybody else but professor Eubanks and the cooks and Roger and I were only ones left at the seminary. So we took some strips off the walls where was plastered and there's a little wood stripping there and we would turn the main switch electircity off and cut about a foot ofmaih line out of there and when night comes there wasn't no lights on. We tacked it back and smoothed it over with chalk and you couldn't find it. It took 'em nearly two weeks before they found that. Every night it was dark. If they didn't have a hurricane there at night. You never heard such noise in your life. There was a professor named Beecher and they called him old Tom Cat. I don't know how he got hald of that nick name. But they'd get around and meow and
