(You were saying it cost quite a bit of money to put it on.)

Yeah. From the time he makes that vow, and cars go here and there to get certain things—they come to Oklahoma and get certain things they have to have. They go to South Dakota to get certain things they have to have. They go here and there. And each trip costs a little. But right there when they have that Sun Dance—when they start—that's when the expense starts—the money part. But this other—what expenses they have—they don't count that. Till they start to move into camp, that's when the expenses start.

(What are their expenses then—when it starts? What would their expenses be?) Well, they got to hire this and that, you know. Runners. They pay them runners. They pay for somebody going to get—where they spot them slough grass. They pay for going to get that sage. They pay for this and that. And the groceries—they have to cook. You seen that hig long line of groceries they take in there. Each one of them groceries costs. And them shawls and blankets and dress goods, and whatever they have to have. It all counts.

Expense that goes into that.

(What about these runners -- what do they do?)

The runners? They go here and there, to different camps, you know. They go get this and that. Everything's got to be paid for. In the Indian way, yeah. (Well, would the payment be made in money?)

Money, or an exchange for something the valuation of the money. Somebody wants certain items they have to have—they have to go get it and send it over. What they have to have. Each—Something that the Indian's got, costs. Somebody wants a horse for something that they have to have. They got horses over there and a certain horse—instead of giving them that horse
