

(Yeah, she is.)

Yeah, (conversation not clear) .

Well, she talked to me for three hours perhaps and I got all of that down on tape but I was very glad that I found out about her and talked to her because why she must know more than most people do.

(Yeah, it seems like you might have to come back and do some research you know, among your tribe, on certain things we can't include to the private, you know, religion, they been wanting tapes on that but we understand that is kind of hard to go in that exact, you know, but it should be taped.)

It should be. It's going to be lost if -- But that old man Tanedah, he knows, a lot.

(Oh yeah, Corn Bread yeah.)

Corn Bread, that's right.

(He offered to do a tape didn't he, we just haven't been back down here to tape him. He was out there this morning.)

That's right. There's another old man, too, there, real old timer, I didn't see him--I don't remember seeing him before. I don't know his name but he's --

(Had little braids.

I think so. What's his name?

(Clyde Ogtake.)

Ogtake?

(Yeah, he's very old and has little thin, braids.)

I think that might be who I saw, yeah.

Woman's voice: (I think he would be nice.)

(He's about the last of the Indian doctors, just about here.)
