

Yeah! She said it was strong, coffee.

(Strong, black--)

Black. She said they had call it peaberry coffee. You can grind it yourself. You know, they had little old you know--

(Yeah. Oh, those little coffee grinders. You put your coffee beans in it. And they called that peaberry coffee?)

Yeah. This the way we done. If we don't have no coffee, we just scorch it like meal. We had boiling water, you know, in a pot like we make coffe. We just put in in there like coffee and know how many cups you want. And I mean, you'd get black coffee. Taste funny, but it's coffee. (laughter)

(It was somethin' though)

Yeah. It helps out.

(That was when you all were real hard up?)

Uh-huh. We do everything. We either drop bread, you know, her did it too. Bean bread, we cooked bean bread. Stuff like that.

(INTERRUPTION)

Sakey and Maggie conversing)

(Are they full-blood Cherokee?)

Uh-huh. (Cherokee.) That's pretty

CHEROKEE NAMES

(Huh! 'Back a long time ago, when you'll were still little girls and everything, people were gettin' married and havin' babies and all that, did they name their children names like that or did they have Cherokee names?)

(Maggie and Sakey speaking in Cherokee)

They just--I don't know what do you call it. She said when they named her
