

Maggie: Uh-huh, well, I used to. And I mean I bled my nose, you know, and never quit. I felt so dizzy when I was---

It always hurts right there. It looks like something in there, and move around---

Maggie: Yeah, I had that trouble, Faye, we was talking about. You know, it just look like it's shaking, you know.

(You think it's your nerves or you think maybe it's your intestines?)

I guess, that's what they blow something trying to--blood get out.

(Making sounds of heart pumping), all the time.

(Oh.)

I just can't hardly sleep. I can't lay down on that way.

Maggie: Huhhh, that's the way I am. I can't lay down on this side.

(Does it hurt? Does it hurt, Aunt Suzie, on that side?)

No.

Maggie: No, you just give out, ain't it. You just don't feel right, ain't it?

Yeah.

Maggie: That's the way I get. I don't feel right. I can't lay on this side, Faye.

(Just lay on that other side?)

Maggie: Yeah.

And I--sometimes when I feel too bad, I go to hospital, just stay there little while, and---

(Until you feel better, huh?)

Maggie: Yeah, she does rest down there when she go up there little while. You do get worried of home. You just have to stay away from them little while, though.

PROBLEMS OF HOSPITALIZATION AND DOCTORS

And the last time I went, I never got to see the doctor. I just got tired
