

I can help them about, especially with the direction for the job situation. And then the Indian can go back and say something. Seem like the white man looks right at him and sees straight through him. And if he sees this, well the white man. The Indian can't even look the white man straight in the eye. Of course, there's some questions that the Indian can't even answer because they don't know--they don't know intelligently enough to ask questions that people, I guess you could say, force them to say. Or surprise 'em to say, like you doin' with me tonight. Anyway, I'm--I'm doing my best.

(You're doing wonderfully well. You're beautiful.)

But anyway. Like I say, the Indian can always get a job. Usually, he'll start out from the lowest jobs. But he doesn't have time to hunt around and pick the best job which is suitable to him. An Indian--lots of times, maybe he's got two years of college education. He's doing a welder's job. The reason for this is that he needs a job at the time and he couldn't afford to mess around, I guess you would say, look around for another job. I'm sure he could find another job better qualified to and something he's better qualified at. Then at the time he's at the welder's job. He loses all his interest inside the job he's more qualified at doing. But in this way because of his being lack of interest and time not involved in what he's really qualified to do. Just loses everything that he could be trained to. Therefore, he's only capable of what he's currently doing at the time.

(Whatever he can pick up at the time to make a living.)

This is what he's really lookin' out for. Is lookin' out for a living.

RELOCATION

(Well, what do you think about this job training program? I understand that Oklahoma turns out absolutely droves of welders. Welders. Welders.
