

(Well, Wallace, you were telling me something a little bit earlier about-- you have a situation this fall where you want to go back to school, and you acutally just don't have the funds. For some reason or other, you can't get your Indian grant this fall. Why is that?)

Well, I can get my grant. Since I'm newlywed, I guess I should say. My wife has the same year in college that I am.

(Both of you are seniors?)

We're both seniors. And that way I feel that if I overlook my education right now, and put her through college, then I can complete my college after she completes hers. Because we both tried going to school together and it was impossible for us to maintain a real good study habit. And not having the available funds not only for our college education but for our own personal and private bills. We have--

PROBLEM OF GETTING BIA GRANT FOR WIFE

(Aren't you having a little trouble getting Indian money though from the Bureau or from school or someplace? Now why is it?)

Well, I'm not. But my wife is. Because she does not--they do not feel that she has the required grade point for the acquired number of hours that she already has.

(Well, you only have to have a C average?)

Well, she does have a C average. This is what they overlooked. They declined her a grant. Because she didn't have a two point grade average. Two point, that's a C average. However, she did have a C average and they had a mistake in their books which was largely to their fault. But I--

(Can't you get this corrected?)

I imagine we could but--like what they did to me--did to her. After we talked to them and brought to their attention the fact that they had an
