

Something like that, I forget which was which.

(Well, I guess that country has changed a while lot since you can remember, hasn't it?)

Its changed. Terrible.

(Interruption.)

BREAKFAST, YEARS AGO

(Chicken for breakfast now. That would be unheard of. But they did it in those days though. And I can remember when they would--why they'd have big old pieces of fried home-cured ham and red-eye gravy, biscuits, sorghum, oatmeal and honey and all that kind of stuff for breakfast.)

Yes sir. Sure.

(Now that's just how much times have changed, I guess.)

Times have changed, I guess.

(tape skip)

(Dutch ovens. You remember those?)

Yes sir. Yes sir..

BUYING FLOUR

(Oh I mean they could fix a meal in them things. It was out of this world.)

--when you could buy fifty pounds of flour for a dollar and a nickel.

That's when there was lots of flour sold seem like. Nobody's buying flour now.

(No.)

No, they don't use it.

(They might buy, oh, five pounds.)

Five pounds.

(Last'em five months. Well, was it rare that they' buy flour by the hundred pound sacks? In thos days?)

Yes sir. Yes sir; hundred pounds of flour was a big sack of flour.
