Well, there's a few of 'em up there that's got tombstones. Lots of em
--most of 'em's got these old sandrock.

(Yeah.)

And on up here where I was telling you where this Dr. Sanders used to own. Its on up there passed the Sanders school house about a quarter of a mile.

(Yeah.)

Those--you might say he started a family cemetery there. Oh, I guess, 25 or 30 graves there. But you take a lot of them now, I don't know anybody would want to do that. Tombstones nearly all been turned over.

(Well.)

Broke up: There's one up here. I was telling you about Adele. I remember when I moved here, pretty good size little cemetery. About as big as this yard, I guess, and that garden it just--well I don't have no idea. I guess fifty or sixty tombstones there.

(Well.)

Maybe more than that. Its good size one. Just started a family graveyard.. Lot of people just buried there and you know a man bought that way back years ago. He used to live at Westville. His name was Stone.
He bought that farm. You know what he done? He pulled up all them tombstones. Stacked'em up in a pile. Farm is right over there at the graveyard.

(Can't imagine a fella doing that.)

I couldn't either.

(No.)

No, that's something that I wouldn't have done if I never had a place for garden.
