

(Yeah.)

Now days, used to, but now I think they're all gone.

(So I've never seen one. I'd like to see one. I don't guess there's any left is there?)

There may be a few. That is iron ones now.

(But one of the old original wooden ones.)

No, You'll never find one. You might see one at mother's home.

(Might.)

Be an accident if you did.

(Yeah.)

Some of these antique stores somewhere.

(You know lot of that old time equipment, like you was familiar with when you was a young fella. Its all gone now.)

Yeah.

(I heard my folks talk about cradle.)

Yeah.

(Well, young kids like me, they've never seen a cradel.)

You might be fooled, you might see a cradel.

(Well, five fingers.)

Uh-huh, like that.

(Yeah.)

And a scythe just like this briarhood scythe. They call that scythe, you know, that--you call that handle, I guess.

(Well, how did they use that thing?)

Well, they just--they use it cutting wheat. They had one of these scythes, one of these fingers working you know. They had some kind of a thing down here. Little wire for the top of this,

(Yeah.)

To hold that from falling back. And doggone you can cut that wheat.
