

Laughter

Right! It got in there some way. I think that's how come I have to shave every morning. (Oh! Really) I think that's where all that "yoneg" blood is.

Laughter

(Aah,)

(Yeah, I always heard Indians don't have to shave.)

Yeah, and, so, but he claims three-fourths Cherokee. My dad does. Of course he looks Indian, but his birth certificate says a half.

(Uh-huh)

But my Mom is full-blood.

(She's full-blood Kiowa?)

Right.

(I heard the Kiowa's killed more white people than any other tribe.)

That's right, that's right. Sometimes, I wish I was back in those days.

Laughter

No, it may not be a good idea, either. But according to History, the Kiowa's were the most ferocious Plains tribe there were.

(Really?)

The Kiowa's. They just didn't receive as much publicity because they weren't as large as the Comanches and Cheyennes. The Sioux.

(They were a smaller tribe?)

A smaller tribe, uh-huh. They were more-or-less situated down in Texas and New Mexico.

(Uh-huh.)

They came in contact more with the Mexican people in the late 1700's and the 1800's than they did with the American settlers.

(Well, did they take them as slaves, I mean did they fight with them a lot and take them as slaves?)

Like the Mexicans, you mean?
