

wait a couple of months to get an appointment.

(Uh-huh.)

Aah, but I really don't know that much about it.

(Well, I'll tell you, just to have your teeth checked and cleaned, they will not check and clean your teeth.)

They won't? I didn't know that.

(They work on a priority system and if the mother is pregnant or school children and that's all they take care of.)

I know my brother needs some work. He's got real bad teeth up in front, like you was saying.

(Uh-huh.)

It needs to be pulled and he needs a new set.

(Is that from an accident that he had?)

No. All my, for some reason, all my brothers teeth are bad, except mine.

(Uh-humm.)

But I never did like something sweet.

(Well, that's probably helped you, you know?)

And I never did like it and I still don't. Ever once-in-a-while.

(Well, has things like that now, do those things annoy you or bother you, that your people has to suffer those things and no one does anything about it?)

Of course it does.

(Do you ever think about it?)

All the time.

(And try to figure out solutions or who you should talk to or?)

If I had a million dollars or a billion dollars, I think I'd set up a clinic, in ah, any type of trouble that any Indian had, with the law, medical, couldn't pay his bills, wanting to buy a car, or needed a loan. Now, if I had this much money to waste, I would set up this type of deal and just say, "come to me, when you need something." Of course it'd spoil 'em. But it does bother to see Indian people getting jipped, especially financially.
