

his problem.

(Uh-huh. He'd been away awhile too, hadn't he?)

He was; just like I said, he just needed to identify with more Indians and get in there and let 'em know that he was interested.

(I think he loved them but it was very hard for him to show his emotions.)

Maybe that's just the Indian in him.

Laughter. . . .

(The Indian in him won't let him be Indian.)

That's kinda funny, isn't it?

(I heard that his mother was fired. She was working down there in the clothing. . . .)

Yeah, they got rid of her.

(And I heard that she was fired, too, not long after he was let go or quit or whatever he did.)

Well look how many advantages. . . .

(Was that punitive action or. . . .)

I don't know, I'm not. . . .

(Just can't say?)

MORE ABOUT JEALOUSY

I couldn't say. You know when you get dissatisfied with something, if you don't like a person, personally just because of who he is not how he works, it plays a lot in the action you'll take if you're in a position to say 'hire or fire'.

(Uh-huh.)

I have to control this feeling. If I don't, you know look at a person and I don't like him, I don't have a right to fire him because I don't like him personally. If he's a good worker, and does his job and I know he can help us, I ought to be big enough, to say, well even though I don't like him, if he can help us, "come on in."

(Uh-huh.)
