

This is if I only had them down there, I think, they fail to recognize the capabilities of some of these people up there and they can't work together. Like I say, I think I'm better than you are, you're not as good as me, why should you get a higher position than me? Why should you be getting more money than me?

(Well is his ex-father-in-law still working there on the construction crew?)

I don't know. I really don't know that much about it.

(I can't think of his name right off but you know who I mean.)

I know who you mean.

(I can't remember.)

But I think if they would forget all, get rid of all this jealousy. Heck, even I have a tendency to get jealous every once in a while.

(You mean like if someone has a better car than you do?)

Right. Well of course that's natural to anybody. But. . . .

(Well, I don't. What's wrong with me?)

I don't mean such jealousy where your eyes get red and bug out of you. You're just sitting there.

Laughter. . . .

(And turn into a monster!)

More Indian than anything else.

(Uh-huh.)

But jealousy and money, too, is the thing the people are after and part of the reasons why, especially this tribal office up here can't get along. They've been through six managers at the Restaurant. They're on their second business manager. I'm just wondering how long Bob Stopp will last.

(Well, part of it is because they can't get along with Earl Boyd Pierce, isn't that it? Maybe I shouldn't say this but I mean I've heard so many of the people say things like that.)

Yeah, I've heard remarks that Earl Boyd Pierce is hard to get along with. But
