

said one. "All right, you better go before she begins cooking."

So, one of them went. This thing called corn was troubling this young man. He hid behind the smoke house and watched for his grandmother. Later on, the grandmother came carrying a large pan and went into the smoke house. The young man peeped through a small hole. When the grandmother got into the smoke house, she put the pan under where she was standing. Then, she struck both her sides. And when she hit her sides, corn fell from every part of her body. They fell until the pan became full. When she came out of the smoke house, she carried this pan of corn and dumped it into the pot and began cooking it. That's what the young man learned. He went back to his brother and told him about it. When he arrived where his brother was, his brother asked what he had learned. He said to his brother, "This delicious food of grandmother's that we have been eating comes from her body. She shakes it off from all over her body. She puts the pan under it. She strikes her sides. It falls off of her body and falls into the pan until it is full. And that is what we have been eating," he said to his brother. His brother said, "We really eat an unsavory thing, don't we?" So, they decided that they would not eat anymore of it when they got home. When they arrived home, their grandmother had dinner ready. Again, she had the same kind of food. They both didn't eat much. "What's wrong? You're not eating very much. Don't you like meat?" said the grandmother. The young men said, "No, we're just too tired to eat. We've been walking so much now." "But I think that you don't like meat," she said, "or, maybe, you've learned something from somewhere. That's the reason that you don't want to eat." At that moment, the grandmother became ill. She
