

(There was a Courtland Long who did work there.)

He worked in the office there. Kept books or somehow like that-- or somethin'.

~~(Do you remember Mr. Saran, who worked there?)~~

Yes, Arthur.

(Arthur Saran. Did you ever know C. R. Anthony when he was working there?)

No, I don't remember him. He might have been there but--

SCRIPT MONEY

(Well how did they--did they issue--tell me about script.)

It was a piece of paper that they wrote out, just like a, anybody writing out a receipt or somethin', just had the amount on it, and whatever you get, why they give it to you by per capita-- they call it the per capita payment. And when they was goin' to issue them, that payment, why they'd give you a chance to use that up where you got your money and they issued you that--that script money. And oh, we used to just rattle them old papers around.

(Well how often did you have percapita payments?)

Bout' once I think. Once a year.

(Once a year.)

Un-huh.

(Do you remember about how much it amounted to per capita. For each person?)

Well, it was different. They had different--they paid you a certain amount sometimes and maybe more next time.

(What was the most that you remember getting?)
