

It goes something like this. He said that a Kansas farmer knew that a hundred and sixty-eight acres that he wanted, but he's afraid that something might happen that he wouldn't get on the day of the race, in other words, September, 1863, 1893. So, what did he do? Said Dr. Dale, "He, for three weeks, he would get on his horse with a sack of shell corn and go down to Spotty Water," and there, you could guess what had happened? He would feed his horse, go back to Kansas, and he repeated for three weeks. You got it figured out? In other words, I'm guessing the horse, well, it's time for shelling corn. So, the morning of the race, then, he was ready to run and he thought he might have a better chance of getting the property that he had been looking at for a long long time. So, when you think of other places, I can't, there's too much to cover, but this is as far as the Cherokees are concerned. Now, you look other places, you have this green part. You have the yellow part on the map. That's this, a completely different story. This area, run will take place. This area lottery will take place. By lottery, in other words, you are hoping that your name will be drawn, and, then, you will get a hundred sixty acres in this area. This yellow place here is another completely different story--in no way related to the history of the Cherokees as you certainly note. The period of the cattlemen would take another two-three hours if we covered this in detail. So, we might take a hurried look at where the Cherokees fixed into the picture story of the cattlemen. This covers another ten year period.

PERIOD OF THE CATTLEMEN

There was the period of the cattlemen--really starts in 1867 period of, but it continues through 1890 when a number of Texas cattlemen will make small fortunes in cattle range business. Briefly two or three hours in
