

I think so.

(Well, that's something--)

It sounded right pretty, too.

(Yeah. Something that you never see nowadays.)

No, they had--all the churches in town had bells. You hear those bells on Sunday morning.

(That would be a beautiful sound to me.)

It is to us. We have about three church bells in town now. The Presbyterian has one, and the Catholic and the Episcopalian. And that's an old bell that we have at our church. It was the first little frame church. And they had that bell. And the ladies worked so hard to earn the money for that bell. And they turned it over to the deacon and they went out and bought the bell and when they went to put it back all the deacons' names was on that bell.

(The ladies didn't get any credit for it.) /laughter/

No. (Well.)

And that's been a standing joke all these years.

(I guess it has. Well, it's nice that the women were good enough not to raise a fuss about it.)

I hear 'em laugh about that lots of times. And you know Pheasant Hill school bell is at Dwight Mission in Tahlequah.

(It is. Well.)

Well, it's not right in Tahlequah.

(It would be south.)

And that's the first, I mean the Pheasant Hill bell.

(Yeah.)

Saved.

(That's most interesting.)

Well now, Major George Lowrey is buried in Tahlequah. In the city cemetery, I think.
