(Has it always been this way or are there times that had different significance in it?)

Everybody has got different rulings but it's all the same. In your points, scores and placings, positions and but your clans, and townships, what have you, is all the same, And, but, like I say not just anybody could play it. If you've already had a drink of water or maybe something to eat, I mean no use going out there because more likely you'll start cramping and carrying on and your horse whip, which we call a weed that your medicine man comes off and whips you with it, and keeps you from cramping and so forth. It all depends on however you want to play it. I mean, if you want to go out there and play a rough game, go out there and play a rough game. But I mean let it be a sporty game where, oh, in other words, show your skill. It's, it's enjoyable to see.

(What are some of the rules once you get out and play? How do you score points?)

It's just like one, two, three, so forth, you know. And score all the way from ten to twenty. Or actually if there's a tie it could just continue and continue, you know. But usually, biggest part of the time there is no tie when it comes to the point, they have chosen a number, when it comes to that, first one come, has it, the winner. And this just goes one, two, three on up. And there's no actual ruling except you have a position and you just keep your position. It's every man for himself once that ball comes to you. You can get it and throw it to your next position then your next position just keeps sending it down until it goes through between the two holes. And, but, that is, if you're not brought down, while reaching for the ball.

(Are you allowed to touch the ball with the body or not?)

No, you are not allowed to touch the ball with your hands or the body. If you can't do it with a stick, get out of the way.
