

INDIAN MEDICINE MEN

No, you don't. Not anymore. You have a lot of, the younger generation which has taken from their elders or relatives which they have learned. They use it in a bad way. It a very bad way. Now they play with their medicine not like it used to. The younger generation learned it to get kicks out of. But it wasn't mean for, wasn't meant for the son, the cousin, the nephew, the so-so take it up as to play with and to play it against the other people with meanness. It was meant to use in a good manner to help the other Indians, to help the other individual. But now those that was, you know, has left to the younger ones that have learned. They use it in a bad way and manner to aggravate more or less, I would say and to just ease the other party. And it's not doing them no good. Just only meanness. You have the good and you have the bad, in no matter what. And some of these, not all of them are like that. Some of them still carrying, try to keep it, you know, to themselves and use in the right way. But you're, if you're young, you don't use it till you're old enough to use it. More likely you either have to be thirty-five or forty to start using it. But they start using it right along twenty, twenty-five to start using it. But that's how your younger generation started getting older and started dying off pretty quick because they use it in the wrong manner. But it is nothing to play with. And not just for anyone to, you know, to spread it out because your very songs and herbs are very sacred, in a way. They will work for you and they won't work for you. All depends on how you want to use it. You play with it long enough. You grow old fast. And all depends on the individual if he wants to be a bad egg, well, he carries that with what he was left and uses it in a bad way. But it wasn't meant for him to do it as that. If your medicine man has all died out and you have very few left, that are good and lot of people don't believe this, but there are things that I have seen and I have believed and many nights I have spent
