

of during summer times, I say four months out of the year that's July, say from about May, June, July and August, spend it among a group of Indians wherever they're at, with one tribe. You will learn. Only it takes a lot of, you loose a lot of sleep. You get hungry but it's part of the deal. But you learn. You don't forget. Now that you've known something, feel like you're a man, you're, you have strength that others don't have. You can do things that the others can't do. And it's a very interesting thing that you go through.

TALKS ABOUT OWN CULTURE AND RELIGION

(Out of curiosity, how do you compare, or how do you see your culture and your way of life in this regards with your religion compared to say, a religion that I might follow or a religion a white individual might follow?) Well, long time ago from listening, they used to take in people that these people were friends friends that they liked and they respected. This friend was a friend that they can depend on. That he'd be just like them. This friend was a friend that they could, well compared to, let's say, for example now, say a brother and a brother and one wife. Well, the brother won't trust the other brother because of his wife and so forth, there's a lot of jealousy there. Now, that's just an example of saying there wouldn't be anything in that manner that there wouldn't be nothing but trust that you would fulfill to learn and carry it to yourself and hoping that one day when he's gone that this guy that you have taught over so many years. You have taken in as a friend over so many years would not fall back on you but would teach the next guy of what he has learned. And these things that your, that comes into, in other words, it's just a trusting thing. If you want to take in somebody to learn all of this. You like them, you like for them to be like you. All he has to do is say okay. And you're just part of them. Some of the most amazing things that you've never seen before and you'd
