

I turn this 120 acres to them. There's a few things that I would like to think about before I get my patent. I can get that. Not just everybody can do it, I can.

(How many of the Apaches have patents?)

None that I remember. Alonzo's the only one that got his patent. Tennyson Berry. Tennyson and Alonzo, and there's some Kiowas. But them is the only two that I know of had their patents. Got rid of their land. Kiowas...few of them got their patents. Henry Tenadoah is one of them Joe Kaulity got one.

(Helen, was it your uncle that lost his land when he got a patent?

Why do you think that happened?)

Helen: Yea. Well, when he got his patent, here come a banker or somebody. Wanted to loan him so much money; for that place, all that, and he had to pay so much back. See, he was farming. Well, when he quit farming and all that, and he fell behind on his tax, they took his land. And that's what happened to my cousin, you know I was telling you about that, my cousin live across the street from that spring, they move him out at twelve o'clock in the night. And, we's up there... to my mother's and then, I went up there to visit them and my dad had a one room house on the north side of that house that was my grandpa's and grandma's. And, mama got up in the night, and she called my daddy, and she said I hear a wagon. I hear somebody I hear somebody crying. Daddy, you know, he got up, he went outside. Here, he drove up, furniture and all, he took from them. All he took out was her dishes, her clothing, He took all their bedding, furniture and all they went. Come up there, after twelve. That old lady was crying.
