

His brother--his brother was a preacher. And he was such a good man. And his sister was a good woman. And we all got along just fine.

(Oh.)

When we come, and when Ben was on his death bed all of them come together and help us out. And so that's the way we went, come back. Go whenever time to go. We had real nice time. Got lots of solks up there, you know. They always want to go and I always did too. Always want to go to church. So we'd go. And, on his deathbed, he said to his sister, "You all, you all must love one another." "Like you do right now." That's what he said. And I guess we did. So then she passed away and (name not clear)--living now, his niece.

(Uh-huh. People had better love for each other those days.)

Oh, yeah they sure did. They give you money, you know, whenever you in need. And do lots of things for you.

(How far did you all live out in the country?)

We lived at Hanna.

(At Hanna?)

Uh-huh. Out in the country. We had a good little place but I lost it.

(You lost it?)

Sold it.

(Oh, you sold it.)

Uh-huh. After me and Bill got married.

(Bill? Who was Bill?)

Connor.

LIFE WITH SECOND HUSBAND, BILL CONNOR

(And that was your second husband?)

Uh-huh. Yeah.

(Where did you all move to after you sold the place?)
