

Yeah. They know. Freddie knows some of that. But there's so much. They all tied up.

(What else did she have medicine for?)

She's got lot of medicine, but I forgot it. When somebody come, sick person come, I always be the one be boiling medicine. Straining...get that part ready. But I always don't know what fit the root she got out. That's how come I say, if I thought about, I could remember for myself. We just keep the whole medicine like that...they useful.

(Did she tell you how to fix it? How much of each part to put?)

Yeah.

(Did she mix medicine together when she boiled them, or did she just use one?)

Just one.

(She wouldn't take a pinch of this and a pinch of that?)

No. Cause she used some of them, got some of them...little bit of medicine... Indian perfume. We get from down the river someplace.

(Is that the leaf perfume or the birdseed?)

Its that seed.

(Annie, where did the Old Lady learn all those medicines?)

Oh, I don't know.

(Did that come down from the generations?)

I think so.

(Do people discover medicines themselves?)

I don't know. I don't know how they found out.

(What I wondered was whether you had to inherit the right to use these medicines, or whether you could learn about one in a dream or something?)

Yeah. They said this medicine, this one medicine I know, good. One old lady, Winner's (Smith) grandmother, she hurt herself. And she pinched around,
