

days but I guess that it didn't kill it us. I'm still living. But that beef tasted good and we used to have things like that pumpkins. And apples, pears but I used to love salt pork, meat. I took that for my lunch to school, jelly biscuit sandwich. I didn't have light bread all the time like we do now. And then we used to walk about town and a half miles to school. When I was in the first grade through the winter time we went. Sometimes my dad used to take us in a wagon. He'd been to town and he'd come after us. I guess it was hardship those days but I remember it. He used to provide for us with rubber boot when it snowed. He got some rubber boots. Then he used to walk with us in the snow to school. Even if it rained he'd come by. And I guess it payed off little bit for me. I didn't graduate. I didn't go through tenth grade. But I wish I had. But when I first started school I didn't know a word of English. And then we used to have a family doctor named Doctor Wood. And then I remember we used to get an Indian doctor, too. I remember when an Indian doctor would come to the house. My father used to doctor some too. Get a, some cut the pieces off of that cedar tree and they used to smoke the house. Old things like that. And then they used to doctor us with what I don't know. I was small. And then everytime our family doctor, Doctor Wood, came from town out to our house. I remember his little, black car. Square looking car. Everytime me and my brother saw that we used to run out there in the corn field because I know, we felt like they were going to give us castoria everytime he came. He probably did. And we'd be sitting out there in the corn field. Maybe he'd come for my mother or my daddy. After we'd see the car leave. We'd come out. So one time we saw that car coming we was really running out to the corn field. There was some ashes out there which my dad had just threw out I guess. My brother stepped on it and burn his feet. And he had to come back and face the doctor. And that's what tickled my father so bad because we was running away from the doctor but he had to come see him. And I remember the time when I was playing with those
