

well. And some day, he told my father he was going to meet face to face with this man. And I believe it. And after my brother died my father knew what happened. But since he was a minister he forgave this man. and left him in the hands of God. And about myself again, about the Indian people living today if they would help one another like I said and then encourage one another. And when they see poor Indians. Well we're all poor. If they would make an effort to go out of their way to help one another in so some way I think that would be fine. And these Indian housing they're making these Indians some of them are spending too much on something unuseful and then they get behind on payment of their homes and get put out. And some homes will be taken away from them. Such things as those if they would only know that first things comes first as their home, food and utility. Well they can keep on living there instead of being told to get out. But no some of them drink, they'd rather have that first. And I feel sorry for people like that. And there's a lot of Indians that don't have no job. Even if they get it they go spend it up, soak it in beer or something to drink get in jail..I think they could be helped too but the white people looks on the Indians as ignorant, drinking, don't do nothing. They can do things if they wanted to. And if they didn't feel like that they was like dirt to the society. What they call society. Here's where I look at it, there's no high society better than the next person because they're all human people. And I may be funny like that but that's the way I feel. And the ones that says things and criticizes peoples are the ones that think they're better than the next person. But if everybody really thought that they're not better than him or her, people would get along better. And then if some people think well he's better looking or I've got a new car and this and that they would get along just fine. But no, they don't try to be friendly. They
