

in high society. What they call themselves high class people. There is no such thing as high class people. Physically they might be but not in a spiritual. Cause there's none higher than the other. And what I had to say in interviewing with people, I'm always talking about myself and then I get off the subject. I know my mother, I remember her her used to always make home made cake, homemade pies. When she sent us to school after we moved to town. There was a lady that lived in Eufaula that was good enough to let us live in her home, it was a nice home, without paying rent. And we used to keep, my mother and father used to keep lot of people. They'd come there for dinner and supper. Right just right, right on that time. They knew when my mother cooked I guess. But they enjoyed themselves. And they used to come and visit. When we lived in town. and I remember there were some that come from way out in country to borrow flour or sugar from us. Cause they didn't have any. They used to borrow things like that but still they got along just fine. And they had some things, for the Indians in those days I believe something interesting. I think I would have sent on but nobody said you have to do this or you have to do that. I was just there that's all. I didn't know what was being said half the time, because I didn't know a word of English when I started school. I don't know to much more yet but that's the way I was. And they had a time teaching me. But I am proud to be here. And I am glad what I'm doing. And I like to meet people. I like for them to like as Lucinda Tiger. Like my son Jerome used to say, "I like for the people to like me not for what I am." That was his saying. I guess I feel the same way. And I can get along with anybody. But if they don't want to get along with me I don't think about it. When I went to that meeting at Norman meeting some of those ladies you can figure people out yourself. Just what kind of people they are. And you can feel yourself if they have love
