

I know there was. I can remember that.

(Well. About how many graves were there would you--)

Well, I couldn't tell you 'cause I was just a kid.

(Fifteen or twenty.)

Yes, there was that many. And people said it was orphans that had died.

(Yeah.)

I imagine there was grown-ups there too.

(Probably so.)

'Cause naturally I wasn't too interested then.

(No, well just like nowadays the things that we take for granted and see every day, we don't pay much attention to 'em. But 50 years from now that will be the same kind of history as we're looking back fifty years ago to.)

Right.

(Then they, 'fifty years from now there won't be too many people around just like there is now that can remember.)

That's right. The old timers is gone now. We're the old timers.

(That's right we're--)

I'm talking about myself now.

(I'm talking about me too.)

WHITE OAK IN EARLY DAYS

(Now White Oak town, how old a place is it? Do you know?)

Well, I don't know. You know this book should tell. Have you read it all?

(Not all of it.)

You see White Oak first started down here about where that antique shop is.

(Yeah.)

That's the old White Oak. And then when the railroad came through--well
