

to the seventh. My mind is not in good use today.

(Where did you go to school when you were in seventh grade?)

Jackson Ridge.

(Here in Eufaula?)

Uh-hum. I never did go to boarding school.

(Oh)

I just went to here. And these women I went to school with, they're old as I am. They're still living. And they come visit me, sometimes or they'll call me.

(What do you do now days? Since you stay home by yourself. Do you have something that you do to on your time?)

Well I sew a lot when I'm home. But I don't, well since I've been in town

I guess I would have been lonely and lonesome if it wasn't for Lois, my cousin. She got me that job and she wanted me to go out and work at the nursing home or stay with somebody. She found me the job and she kept telling me, "Try it anyway and see if you don't like it. You can quit. You don't have to work. Just go and try." So I thought I'd try. I went and stayed with a couple. And welfare paid me. And it was alright I got to go home cause we got a pickup. I had transportation so I went home at night. And I worked there. And some how then I worked there about a year I guess. And I went to the hospital. And when I come back this couple had to have someone to stay with them so they got another one. And my cousin went and got me a job in a nursing home. She wanted me to work there. And I said, "I don't believe I could." But she said, "Try it." So I went up there and I tried it. And it was alright. I worked there for a while and then I got to work in that Indian boarding school. That was a good job. And I was going to be on steady up there. I still made it on a roll. But they'll call me when anybody's sick or where someone can't work. I'll get to work. But I'm not
