

from places to places to places and they keep dragging around with them and they had a little tipi they live in..just the two of them. And one day, this chiefs son, early in the morning..he announced and said, "My sister is very sick and want all you people to come and see her." And they were all around their tipi and trying to get this girl well, but she just got sick all at once and then that night, after everyone had went to bed, she died. And when she died that morning, these two old ladies they heard a lot of crying out there so they went they said, "Hey my friend, she said, get up and go see those people. They are very rich people and I know they got lot of things. We might just as well go over there. Hurry, put your mocassins on." And they put their mocassins on, pick up their blankets and went on over there. They had a tipi and it was all open and spread out like an arbor and people were just crowded in there. This girl inside was, you know, laying on ground..they didn't have no beds at that time, you know. She was laying on the ground and the father and mother were on the side of this girl that died. It was their only daughter. So everybody was crying for that girl. And finally these two, they couldn't get in the midst because there was a lot of peoples was there and they were all hollering and crying and they didn't know how to get close to the body of this girl. They wanted to get real close to it so the father and mother could see what they doing. So they didn't have no room to go in, so they climb on top of the tipi and they jump up there and hollered and cried and cried and cried. Both of them. One of them say, "Uh-na-na-na-na-na-noi-oi-oi-oi", like that. And this other women say , "Ho-ho-ho-ho", and she way "Cry like me. Don't cry like that. Just cry like me. If I cry, just holler like me." So
